Honghone, March 30th, 1885. Tax discussion raised at the meeting of the Chamber of Commerce on Friday by Mr MacEwen may do some good by pressing be compassed by arrangement with the necessity of pushing on the defence works and of placing the Colony, as soon as possible, in a position to repel any attack directed against it. We regret, however, that Mr. MACEWER should have failed to give the local Government and the Officer in Command of the Troops credit for having done anything towards getting the defences of the Colony put into an effective condition, and it was also a pity that a scare should have been raised altogether beyond what is justified by circumstances. A perusal of the remarks of Mr. MacEwan might justify the belief that a war with Russia and France united was immediately imminent, and that this port was in hously danger of being bombarded. It is true that at the present moment British relations with Russia are in a somewhat critical condition owing to the Afghan boundary question, but even if that dispute should-which Heaven forefordend in the breaking out of bostilities, it is in the last degree unlikely that this colony would be attacked by the Russian Squadron. Admiral Czown would have too much to do the idea of an alliance between France and Russia, that is wildly improbable. French bave no quarrel with England. There have been differences between the two countries over the Egyptian question, and some soreness was created in France by the unwise and unnecessary enforcement of the Foreign Enlistmont Act by the British Government, but the friendship between the two nations, which has now existed unbroken for more than thirty years, is not likely to be seriously disturbed for any but a grave cause, nor would the French Government lightly embark upon a life and death struggle with England which-whatever its resultwould lay them at the mercy of Germany. The French people, like the English, have had enough of war and its expenses, and will be glad enough to conclude a satisfactory peace with China. Supposing, however, as we have said, the present regrettable difficulty with Russia should unfortunately eventuate in the breaking out of hostilities, and sup. | the Coast Inspector, Imperial Maritime Customs, posing, which is more unlikely, that a portion of the Russian fleet succeeded in giving Admiral Dowert the slip and got down unseen to Hongkong, it by no means fel. Winter and summer he wore a long thin paletôt which never seemed to wear out, and was always neat and shabby. As years crept upon him he deserted the Champs Elysées end of the Tuileries gardens, and confined his walks to that supply corner known as. Little Provence. Hardly anyone knew his name, but all the children and the gardeners called him the Sparrow King. He used sometimes, for the amusement of the former, to hold sparrow reviews. In frosty weather his pockets were stuffed with bread, which he crumbled for the birds. If they fought he gave them no more, and, with his hat drawn over his eyes to mark displeasure, walked silently away. When he was young and could go into the country, other tribes than spurrows acknowledged his sovereignty. He hated the cage. During the siege he was very badly off for food; but neither hunger nor argument could induce him to play fulse for his stomach's sake to any of the sparrows which perched on bim.
